

Author Bio – David Hill

David wrote his first stories when he was seven. They were about an otter called Derek. More recently he has been shortlisted in the Legend Press national novel writing competition and won the New Eastbourne Writers short story prize. His first novel has been published in Spain where he lived from 1998 to 2007. He is currently living in Eastbourne and writing a series of comedy science fiction novels.

He has worked as a flamenco guitarist in Spain and a Sherlock Holmes impersonator in front of Buckingham Palace. He now works in a large book warehouse where the management frequently have to tear books from his hands and tell him to work instead of read.

The story submitted, One Breath On The Interstate, was inspired by a road trip in the USA where he heard about a dramatic near-accident like the one in the story but fortunately didn't experience it first-hand.
